WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., NOV. 9, 1894.

The results of the election were surprising, not to say astounding, alike to the people of Washington and to the politicians. The victorious republicans were quite as much astonished as the defeated democrats. Each had been bold in their claims, but neither had dreamed of any such tidal wave business, notwithstanding the present assertions of the republicans, that they expected it all the time. These sudden political changes which have of late years become so frequent in our national elections, have a deep significance to the student of our political future. Whether they are beneficial or otherwise is a question not easy of final settlement by any other test than that of time. But they indicate that many thousand voters are influenced by their interest, and desire for a change with the hope of bettering themselves, rather than by their party fealty or belief in any particular principles seems well-nigh certain. If that be correct, no political party can hope to control all branches of the government through two consecutive administrations until these discontented voters are made prosperous and contented.

The populists failed to make the gains they expected in the House, but even if they had they would not have held the balance of power upon which they had figured, as neither they nor anybody else had calculated upon the republican landslide which came. While it is not yet entirely certain, the chances are that the populists will hold the balance of power in the Senate after the fourth of next March, the present indications being that there will be 43 republicans, 38 democrats and 7 populists in the Senate, counting Gov. Tillman of S. C., whose election seems assured a popular—it would not change the situation if he acted with the democrats. Should those figures prove correct, it will readily be seen that neither the democrats nor the republicans could organize the Senate without the votes of the populists. The republicans have not however given up hope of electing enough senators to give them a majority.

Neither President Cleveland nor any member of his cabinet has seen fit to express an opinion, for publication, on the terrible drubbing administered to their party, but whatever may be the opinions of the members of the cabinet, it is not believed that Mr. Cleveland is doing any grieving. He took especial pains to allow it to become public that Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, when most people were studying the news of the returns from the elections, he was engaged, at his suburban residence, in going over the papers in a lot of applications for executive clemency, thus indicating that he took no interest in the elections.

There is no doubt about the generalness of rejoicing on the part of the rank and file of the republican party over their successes, but for many of their leaders there are prickly thorns in the roses of victory. The leaders do not fancy the debut of a new presidential candidate. And they know that Mr. Morton will now be considered as such, and that his large majority in N. Y. and the skillful management of ex senator Platt, who is known to the haughty men as an opponent not to be despised, will bring him forward very prominently, if he keeps his health. His age will be a help rather than a detriment, as it would probably result in his getting a much stronger man to take the second place on the ticket with him than a younger man could get. It is certain that the friends of the other candidates are already afraid of Morton.

The new democratic postmaster of Washington had scarcely had time to recover from the effects of the election returns when he received a rude shock in the shape of an official order informing him that instead of having preference to the annual cash value of $50,000 at his disposal, when he takes charge of the postoffice, which he expects to do next week, his privilege will be limited to the appointment of an assistant postmaster, private secretary, cashier and assistant cashier, superintendents of three branch postoffices, tax collectors and six laborers. All the rest will be looked after by the civil service commission, when vacancies occur. This order is far from pleasing to the local democrats, who had been calculating to profit largely by the promotion of one of their number to be postmaster—but the employees of the postoffice are delighted with it.

Common Sense should be used in attempting to cure any very disagreeable disease, catarrh. As catarrh originates in impurities in the blood, local applications can do no permanent good. The common sense method of treatment is to purify the blood, and for this purpose there is no preparation superior to Hood's Sarsaparilla.

LOCAL NEWS.

Startling G. A. R. Story.

Capt. Geo. H. Davenport, the popular and well-known G. A. R. Veteran relates an experience. A leader and power in Grand Army Circles.

Obituary.

It is our sad duty to chronicle the death of Mrs. Mary Cox, widow of Andrew S. Cox, who passed away on Wednesday last at the residence of her son, Edwin Cox, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. She was well and favorably known to the people of Meredith, having lived among us for upward of forty years. An invalid for upward of ten years she has been a patient sufferer and will be sadly missed by both relatives and friends. She leaves one son, Edwin, of this place, and a daughter, Mrs. G. H. Gay, of Boston. Funeral services will be held from the residence of her son, Saturday at two o'clock.

Mrs. Julia Kidder, wife of the late Alden Kidder, died at the residence of her son, Albert A. Kidder, on Tuesday last, at 8:30 p. m. Mrs. Kidder leaves one son, Albert A. Kidder, and a wide circle of friends. She was a member of the Baptist Church and one of its most devoted members.

Mrs. M. A. Forsyth died on Wednesday at 9:30 a. m. She was the widow of Robert Forsyth, who was killed during the war. She had been a resident of this place for thirty years. She attended the Baptist Church and was held in high esteem by the people of the place. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. R. A. Benson of Somerville and Mrs. A. J. Sanborn of Ashland.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, but, as soon as failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by E. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case of catarrh which can be cured by this treatment.

The experience of the gallant captain is the experience of everybody. All who use this great cure of disease, with weak, nervous and ailing, will find it a good result from him. I am no nervous and weak that I would not do to do any hard work for years.

I have often recommended this wonderful cure for disease to my friends, and shall be happy to answer any further inquiries from anyone.

The experience of the gallant captain is the experience of everybody. All who use this great cure of disease, with weak, nervous and ailing, will find it a good result from him. I am no nervous and weak that I would not do to do any hard work for years.

I have often recommended this wonderful cure for disease to my friends, and shall be happy to answer any further inquiries from anyone.

Are you down upon my vision
With your "names and divers,"
I am not, but I am a "name,"
I am a "name" of the "name."
Underneath the sunlike mockery
In the "name" of the "name," I was
One or the gay Terpsichore
Or the sweet Katoe.

These Calliope upon me,
Came to me with her look,
Or was it Euterpe won me
With her accents like a wail?

Green was the "name" of the "name,"
Seemed as each bequeath'd my view,
But it's ceased by the plastic
Shape I gave it to you.

Do not return to the tender
Protestations that you hear,
Let a "name" in soft surrender
To the "name" of the "name,"

It is modesty that smoothes,
How a "name" my breast would bruise!
It's not the "name" of the "name,"
It's only the name.

A COQUETTE.

"I cannot marry my cousin," said Albert to his grandmother. "It is impossible. I know the pain I give you in making this declaration, but nevertheless if you wish Therese and I to be happy you will not insist. You know Therese too much of a coquette just now to be marriageable! She is 20 years old, and am 25. We can both afford to wait."

"Once you have married her she will reform."

"I fear otherwise. Therese is a coquette. She will always be a coquette. Marriage will only stimulate her coquettish instinct."

"But she is in love with you, and you are in love with her, are you not? Each of you has confided in me. Love will bring more wisdom to her."

"With love on one side, and the desire on the other," said Albert.

"With love on the desire to be well dressed and to appear fascinating and bewitching. I think no woman can resist."

"What have you against her?" insisted his grandmother.

"What have I against her? Caprice! Love of display! Love of fine dresses, jewelry, adornment. Love of adulation and flattery, which give me a cold shudder down the back."

"What have you against her?" insisted his grandmother.

"I'm a full-fledged lawyer. I have been in earnest. I have learned in my profession to know traits of human nature that I cannot now mistake. I have learned to know the ways of men and betrayals, and there is nothing like the misfortunes of others to teach one to be on one's guard. Therefore I will not marry my cousin. I will wait awhile. Later, when she has been proved, and when she has sacrificed her coquetry to her love, and a girl who was ready to love him with all her heart."

She also read in her letter that if this were the case he had wished to put the girl to the test before coming to his victory."

Albert did not wait to be told twice. He had never forgotten his love for her, and he came to Mme. de Verus with confidence and joy. When he entered the room she was there.

She rose to meet him lovingly, with her hands entwined. She let her head fall with a murmur of pleasure on his shoulder, and as he put his arm around her nape while he pressed a loving kiss to her parted lips.

"Therese!"

"You still love me!" she whispered. "Yes, I love you! I love you more than ever, more formerly, because you are in love with me, your coquette. Now I have confidence in you."

You were pretty, very pretty, with your fine dark hair. In order to move with the fashion and to satisfy your coquettish fancy you made your hair golden from year to year. Now that you have become yourself again I give you back my heart. I love you more than ever. When your hair turns golden again, I shall know that you no longer love me."

"Never will," she cried, with pleasure.

Alas! it is hard to die at 16!

"I cannot bear it! It is hard to die at 16!"

"You still love me!" she whispered. "Yes, I love you! I love you more than ever, more formerly, because you are in love with me, your coquette. Now I have confidence in you."

talking with the old lady Therese would appear dressed with simplicity and taste, without the brilliance he considered vulgar, and triumphant simplicity in her youth and loveliness.

But when he caught sight of her leaving his apartment, with her hair dyed, and in a rich, showy toilet that would have been more suitable for a wealthy young married woman, his face darkened under a blush.

"Good evening, my cousin," he said to her.

And after a few words of greeting had been exchanged he moved away and lost himself in the crowd.

Mme. de Verus pressed the girl's arm, and in a low voice said to her: "Was it right? Did you not see how absurd Albert was with your trifling?"

"I don't think so, grandmother. He will come back and ask me to dance."

But during the whole course of the evening the little girl noticed nothing of her cousin. He avoided her. Within the whirling crowd of dancers brought her within his neighborhood, he moved away. He danced a great deal. He was charming and amiable to all her who were in the crowd, but the girl who was not overjoyed and did not come there merely to show themselves off. He flitted with some and sat with others. He was delightful to her.

Therese, of course, noticed all this, and affected on her an unnatural gravity that was intended to show how much she could enjoy herself even when Albert was not by her side.

In her heart she said: She left the girl alone, saying she was tired and a headache. The young coquette understood the lesson her cousin wanted to teach her.

And as the days passed away a change began to be noticeable in her toilet and finally in the taste of her dress. She confessed her poor little face bravely and bowed her head to give way again to the natural color.

Was it the effect of love deceived and of a lost love? Therese had sacrificed her golden hair and her exaggerated dress. She was gradually becoming more and more a little manager that moralizes love to praise.

She read good books, she knitted, she did embroidery work and engaged in such reasonable conversation with the grandmother that the old lady noticed with pleasure that she had changed.

The grandmother was very happy over the transformation of her beautiful Therese. She wrote to her grandson to say that she had changed, and was no longer a coquette, a girl, so simple, natural, reserved and with such simple tastes. The best thing he could do was to come and see her. He would find no more gold hair and no more no exaggerated and showy dress. She would find a girl who sacrificed her coquetry to her love, and a girl who was ready to love him with all her heart.

She also read in her letter that if this were the case he had wished to put the girl to the test before coming to his victory."

"I have it here, beneath my pillow, monsignor."

"But why has not returned it?"

"Twirl becomes me well on my head," said Albert, smiling.

"Fis! Vain cain!" cried the angel severely. "Wee well does not represent truly of this fain and must do penance I grant thee absolute.

"Rise!"

"Please this kerchief and restore it to Babette!"

"But," exclaimed Martine, stepped, "if my mother return with the care to have this kerchief and restore it to Babette!"

"Teach not thy papa," said Albert, "to buy the kerchief and restore it to Babette!"

"Teach not thy papa," said Albert, "to buy the kerchief and restore it to Babette!"
